Water, soil, and the earth's green mantle* of plants make up the world that supports the animal life of the earth. (1) Although modern man seldom remembers the fact, he could not exist without the plants that harness* the sun's energy and manufacture the basic foodstuffs he depends upon for life. Our attitude toward plants is a singularly narrow one. (2) If we see any immediate utility in a plant we foster it. If for any reason we find its presence undesirable or merely a matter of indifference, we may condemn it to destruction forthwith*. Besides the various plants that are poisonous to man or his livestock, or crowd out food plants, many are marked for destruction merely because, according to our narrow view, they happen to be in the wrong place at the wrong time. Many others are destroyed merely because they happen to be associates of the unwanted plants.

The earth's vegetation is part of a web of life in which there are intimate and essential relations between plants and the earth, between plants and other plants, between plants and animals. (3) Sometimes we have no choice but to disturb these relationships, but we should do so thoughtfully, with full awareness that what we do may have consequences remote in time and place. But no such humility marks the booming "weed killer" business of the present day, in which soaring sales and expanding uses mark the production of plant-killing chemicals.

prod	duction of plant-killing chemicals.

第2問 次の英文を読んで、下の設問に答えなさい。

Most women enjoy talk and regard talking as an important means of keeping in touch, especially with friends and intimates. They use language to establish, nurture and develop personal relationships. Men tend to see language more as a tool for obtaining and conveying information. They see talk as a means to an end, and the end can often be very precisely defined—a decision reached, for instance, some information gained, or a problem resolved. These different perceptions of the main purpose of talk account for a wide variety of differences in the way women and men use language.

Some of the patterns which will be described vary according to the context. Men tend to dominate public talking time, for instance, while women often have to work hard to get them to talk in the privacy of their homes. Some of the differences reflect different meanings attached to the same linguistic forms. Women tend to use questions, and phrases such as you know to encourage others to talk. Men tend to use such devices to qualify the certainty or validity of the information they are asserting. Men's reasons for talking often focus on the content of the talk or its outcome, rather than on how it affects the feelings of others. It is women who rather emphasize this aspect of talk. Women compliment others more often than men do, and they apologize more than men do too.
